Toward a Secure Society

Challenges in Diversity and Inclusion

Today, security issues come in various forms, including terrorism, information crimes, and safety in local communities. Although national and regional governments have traditionally dealt with these issues, now individuals and the civil society are required to be involved. Each of us now have more responsibility to protect ourselves and those around us. Given this change, how should we deal with threats in our community and traditional state security? As our communities become increasingly diverse, what is the best balance between inclusion and maintaining strong security? The panelists will discuss these issues, touching upon their experience as Japanese American leaders working with security in a multicultural country.

About the Japanese American Leadership Delegation Program

Japanese migration to the U.S. began during the Meiji Era (1868-1912), and there are about 1.3 million Japanese Americans in the U.S. (2010, national census). Following internment during World War II, the Sansei (third generation) and Yonsei (fourth generation) have contributed enormously both to their respective fields of work and their communities. Co-organized by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MOFA) and the U.S.-Japan Council (USJC), a diverse group of 10 Japanese-Americans who are playing leading roles in such fields as business, public organizations, education and the arts are invited to Japan each year.
